HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM LAST YEAR AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

Trump’s election victory in late 2024 initially fueled risk appetites as markets hoped the campaign trail promises of pro-growth deregulation and stimulative tax policy would bolster earnings and economic growth. But this optimism began to fade as it became clear that the new administration’s policy timeline prioritized tariffs and program cuts over stimulative measures, and a “sell America” trade began to emerge in mid-February as non-US markets surged amid a US dollar decline. This trade reached a crescendo with Trump’s early April “Liberation Day” tariffs announcement, which prompted a sharply lower turn among major equity indexes globally. A subsequent delay in the most punitive tariffs eased tensions enough to draw investors back and reignite risk appetites, as markets reached record highs over the summer. We remain cognizant of the many heightened uncertainties in this environment, including the potential resurgence of inflation, growing sovereign debt and escalating geopolitical tensions and conflicts. With clarity in short supply, we highlight the importance of exposure to assets that have the potential to demonstrate resilience across multiple states of the world.

First Eagle Global Equity ETF posted a return of 21.58% (NAV) from its December 19, 2024 inception through August 31, 2025, while the MSCI World Index increased 14.17%. Our equity holdings contributed to performance, and gold-related securities were also a contributor. All geographic regions contributed to performance; North America and developed Europe were the leading contributors while Japan and developed Asia excluding Japan were the weakest-performing regions. Materials, consumer staples and financials were the largest contributors by equity sector, while real estate was flattish and healthcare and communication service were the next weakest-performing sectors.
